—Newark—

The Department of Newark was organized on April 3, with thirteen members. Mrs. Louise M. Merrill, president. From this small beginning the department has increased until now it numbers thirty-two, with a membership of $300. Last month another donation, held for the last year, was received, and the department did not lose a dollar but had $795.50 general fund money.

Col. F. Elmer Elsworth, commander of the Eleventh New York Zouaves, was slain at the battle of Gettysburg. He was the son, the proprietor of the Marshall Hotel, Alexandria, May 24, 1861. Colonel Elsworth was shot down from the rear of the line from Jackson's hotel in full view of the Capitol. It was the first rebel day in the city.

J. F. Chase, of the Third Maine Regiment, was another notable hero of the battle of Gettysburg. He was a member of the Maine State Guard, where he lay upon the battlefield, and was then taken up for dead, but very much alive yet.

Governor Claib Jackson, of Missouri, responded to President Lincoln's call for men April 17, 1861. "Not one minute," he said, "will I stand idly by on an unholy day." Governor Jackson died and was buried at Gettysburg.

Col. T. B. Davis, of the Eighth New York Cavalry, was the only cavalry officer of Southern birth in the Union army. He was born in Mississippi and was killed at Beverly Ford, July 18, 1863.

Probably the tallest veteran of the Civil War was William H. Miller, of the Second Pennsylvania Cavalry. He was seven feet in his stockings.
